

alzheimer's association in-home services

A variety of in-home services are available to individuals with dementia and their caregivers. Utilizing in-home services can provide a caregiver with assistance in caring for the personal needs of their loved one, such as bathing, dressing, and toileting, which often becomes very difficult to handle alone. Also, in-home services can provide an opportunity for respite from regular caregiver responsibilities.

The following is a list of county-based in-home service providers known to the Alzheimer's Association as providing care for individuals with dementia. Many of the agencies provide service in multiple counties and a listing of their service area is available from each agency. We encourage all caregivers to ask many questions about the service to be provided, including the dementia-specific training and education received by the in-home care providers.
