
MO HealthNet for the Aged, Blind and Disabled

Formerly Missouri Medicaid

Many people think that Medicaid and Medicare are the same. Actually, they are two different programs. Medicaid is a state-run program that provides hospital, medical coverage, and long term care services for qualifying people with low income and little or no resources. Each state has its own rules about who is eligible and what is covered under Medicaid. Medicare is a federal health-insurance program for adults age 65 and above and those under age 65 with a disability. Some people qualify for both Medicaid and Medicare.

What is MO HealthNet?

The MO HealthNet program (Missouri Medicaid) provides medical care to qualifying low income individuals age 65 and above or younger individuals with a disability. The goals of the Medicaid program are to promote good health, to prevent illness and premature death, to correct or limit disability, to treat illness, and to provide rehabilitation to persons with disabilities.

Who is Eligible?

An individual who meets all of the following:

- Is 65 years or older OR is 18 years or older and is permanently and totally disabled or legally blind
- Meets current monthly income criteria
- Has limited assets
 - The following are exempt:
 - Individual's home
 - One personal vehicle
 - Some personal items including jewelry and furnishings
- Lives and intends to remain in Missouri
- Is a U.S. citizen or eligible qualified non-citizen

Spenddown: What is it?

- Spenddown is a program for individuals whose income is slightly higher than Medicaid requirements.
- Individuals qualifying for spenddown coverage must pay a certain amount of medical expenses each month before Medicaid begins paying (similar to an insurance deductible).

Protecting the Spouse:

- Under MO HealthNet, married individuals may qualify for spousal impoverishment protection. This allows the spouse of the person using MO HealthNet to protect some of their resources so as to continue living in the community.

What is covered under MO HealthNet?

Long-Term Care

MO HealthNet covers Long-Term Care services for individuals who are in need of skilled nursing care. These services can be provided in a long term care facility or in community-based settings.
